To support family care givers would potentially take some of the burden off of the Transportation system (to and from appointments) and the release from the hospital to their homes/families earlier. I have to work. If something happened to my mom, I would want to help, but can't afford to if I want to pay my own bills. FMLA leave is not enough. It doesn't pay the bills. How can insurance support this resource and monitor it for abuses (because we know there will always be abusers). Maybe there is a system...if there is then it needs to be more widely advertised so we know that it exists and where to find more info so we can use it.
